THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

NIKKI M. MASCALL, REPORTER

I grew up in northeastern Pennsylvania surrounded by woods and lots of farmland, so fresh produce was easily obtainable for my parents to put on our dinner table. Thanks to the local farmers market, I was able to continue having fresh fare long after I moved out. Sadly, that's not something many New Yorkers get to experience on a regular basis, which makes this weekend's arrival of floating food forest Swale at Brooklyn Army Terminal so welcome. TRUMP ADMITS TO PAYING PORN STAR AFTER DENIALS

President Donald Trump said Thursday his personal lawyer was paid back through a monthly retainer, not campaign funds, for the $130,000 given to adult-film star Stormy Daniels to stop "false and extortionist accusations" she made about a sexual encounter with him. Trump, who in April told reporters he did not know about the payment to Daniels made by his lawyer Michael Cohen the month before the 2016 election or the source of the money, said on Twitter the funds were part of a "private agreement" that involved money that had "nothing to do with the campaign." In his fullest account to date regarding the payment to Daniels, whose real name is Stephanie Clifford, Trump acknowledged the nondisclosure agreement with her to secure her silence about what she has called a one-night sexual encounter with Trump in 2006. Trump also forcefully denied the affair. "The agreement was used to stop the false and extortionist accusations made by her about an affair ... despite already having signed a detailed letter admitting that there was no affair," Trump wrote, adding that Daniels and her lawyer had violated it.

TWITTER URGES ALL USERS TO CHANGE PASSWORDS

Twitter urged its more than 330 million users to change their passwords after a glitch caused some to be stored in readable text on its internal computer system rather than disguised by a process known as "hashing." The social network disclosed the issue in a blog post and series of Tweets on Thursday afternoon, saying it had resolved the problem and an internal investigation had found no indication passwords were stolen or misused by insiders. Still, it urged all users to consider changing their passwords. "We fixed the bug and have no indication of a breach or misuse by anyone," Chief Executive Jack Dorsey said in a Tweet. "As a precaution, consider changing your password on all services where you've used this password." The blog did not say how many passwords were affected. A person familiar with the company's response said the number was "substantial" and that they were exposed for "several months." The disclosure comes as lawmakers and regulators around the world scrutinize the way that companies store and secure consumer data, after a string of security incidents at Equifax, Facebook and Uber Technologies.

GIULIANI WANTS LIMITS FOR TRUMP INTERVIEW

President Donald Trump's new chief lawyer said Thursday that if his client agrees to an interview with special counsel Robert Mueller, it should be limited to a few hours and focus on Russian tampering in the 2016 election. Asked which questions might be appropriate, Rudy Giuliani, a former New York mayor, suggested two to Reuters: "Was there some agreement with the Russians? Was there any meeting of Trump with the Russians?" A former federal prosecutor, Giuliani said he was the president's new chief counsel in the Russia investigation but that he would also keep an eye on a U.S. inquiry into a $130,000 hush payment by longtime Trump attorney Michael Cohen to a porn star who said she had a 2006 sexual encounter with Trump. Giuliani said he wanted any Trump interview with Mueller to be limited in time and scope, suggesting for only 2-1/2 hours and not under oath. In addition to the Russia questions, Giuliani said investigators could ask about possible obstruction of justice related to Trump's firing a year ago of then-FBI Director James Comey. The two sides have been negotiating the terms of a possible interview for months.

WH: PRISONER RELEASE WOULD BE GOODWILL MOVE

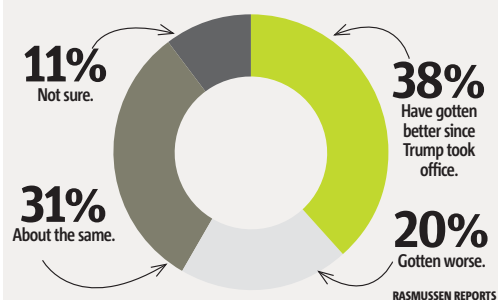

The White House said Thursday it would welcome the release of three Americans imprisoned in North Korea as a goodwill gesture before a planned summit between U.S. President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, but that it could not confirm reports that they are about to be freed. Expectations have grown that North Korea would soon release the three ahead of the unprecedented summit in the coming weeks. Rudy Giuliani, Trump's new main lawyer, told Fox News Channel that Pyongyang would release them as early as Thursday. It was not immediately clear whether Giuliani had direct knowledge of negotiations around the issue. CNN, citing an unnamed source, said on Thursday the prisoners' release was imminent, adding the groundwork for the move was laid two months ago. "We can't confirm the validity of any of the reports currently out about their release, but we certainly would see this as a sign of goodwill if North Korea were to release the three Americans ahead of discussions between President Trump and Kim Jong Un," White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders told reporters.

Floating food forest Swale docks at Brooklyn Army Terminal for the summer

Starting May 5, the free — and edible — perennial garden atop a barge will be docked at Brooklyn Army Terminal.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Have the warmer temperatures we've been experiencing this week in New York City given you a hankering for some summer produce fresh from the source?

Starting Saturday, you'll get your chance to pluck fruits, vegetables, herbs and more right from the garden when Swale, a floating food forest atop a 5,000-square-foot barge, returns to New York City for the summer.

Founded by city-based artist Mary Mattingly in 2016, Swale will be docked at Brooklyn Army Terminal until July 1 and will offer New Yorkers sustainable foods, public programming such as edible and medicinal plant tours, water filtration labs and other educational workshops on Saturdays and Sundays from noon to 6 p.m.

"It's been evolving, and the main purpose of it in 2016 was to address public food in New York City and be a test space — sort of an architectural folly on the water — to think about how this could work on public lands in New York City," Mattingly said.

There are 30,000 acres of public parkland across the city, and Mattingly

sq. ft.

Swale, a floating food forest, sits atop a 5,000-square-foot barge.

hopes Swale can be a food-justice model to bring perennial landscaping to some of that acreage for communities who do not have regular access to fresh food.

While Swale has sailed to different locations in the city, including Concrete Plant Park in the South Bronx and Governors Island, Brooklyn Army Terminal will be its sole home this year.

"The Brooklyn Army Terminal is one of the most innovative industrial campuses in the country. It's a place where New Yorkers are redefining the limits of manufacturing, a place for modern jobs, a place for learning," said James Patchett, president and CEO of the NYC Economic Development Corporation. "Swale will add to the energy on campus, growing food and herbs, teaching new skills and floating alongside over 100 local companies."

Mattingly hopes the blossoming barge will have a permanent home one day.

"We'd love for the barge to stay in one location and for us to focus on land-based sites at the same time," she said.

Comptroller Stringer says Airbnb is removing units from the housing market, but Airbnb says most of its hosts live in the same unit they list. ISTOCK

Airbnb caused NYC renters to pay an extra $616M in 2016, comptroller says

Stringer's office releases report on the effect of Airbnb on rising rents in New York City, but the home-sharing service disputes the findings.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New Yorkers who rent had to shell out an extra $616 million in 2016 because of Airbnb, Comptroller Scott M. Stringer said in a new report.

Stringer's office released a report on Thursday looking at the effect of Airbnb on rising rents in New York City.

This is the first such report, the comptroller's office said, to "empirically estimate a monetary impact on New Yorkers due to Airbnb's rapid growth." In January, a report co-sponsored by New York City housing and tenant advocacy groups claimed that Airbnb took away up to 13,500 units from the city's housing market.

The use of Airbnb has led to rent increases, the comptroller argues, in neighborhoods with a heavy concentration of Airbnb listings, like Chelsea, Murray Hill, Chinatown, Greenwich Village and more.

For every 1 percent of all residential units in a neighborhood listed on Airbnb, rental rates increased 1.58 percent, according to the report.

Citywide, rents rose 25 percent on average between 2009 and 2016, or $279 a month. During the same period, according to the report, Airbnb listings have "skyrocketed, from 1,000 in 2010 to over 43,000 in 2015." Following new city and state laws, those listings have gone down to slightly under 40,000 in 2016, according to AirDNA, which analyzes short-term rental data.

"For years, New Yorkers have felt the burden of rents that go nowhere but up, and Airbnb is one reason why," Stringer said in a statement. "From Bushwick to Chinatown and in so many neighborhoods in between, affordable apartments that should be available to rent never hit the market, because they are making a profit for Airbnb."

The largest absolute effect, according to the report, occurred in Greenpoint and Williamsburg. Average rents there rose by $659 between 2009 and 2016, of which $123, Stringer says, can be attributed to the growth of Airbnb.

Airbnb disputed the report, saying the majority of the company's hosts share the home in which they live, meaning they are not removing permanent housing from the market. Thus, the methodology of the report is inaccurate, said Andrew Kalloch, a policy manager at Airbnb.

"The report also completely disregards an important fact: Every day, home sharing is helping tens of thousands of New Yorkers confront this city's affordability crisis," Kalloch said in a statement. "Thanks to the extra income provided by sharing a room in their home for just a few days every month, black and Hispanic New Yorkers can maintain homes in which their families have lived for generations, millennials can afford to pay their student loans and invest in our communities, and seniors can survive on a fixed income."

"For years, New Yorkers have felt the burden of rents that go nowhere but up, and Airbnb is one reason why."

Comptroller Scott M. Stringer

In an online post, Airbnb responded to Stringer's report further, citing studies like one from New York University in which researchers said dedicating an entire unit to Airbnb would not be as profitable to landlords as having a permanent resident, showing that most landlords do not opt for that route.

"Along with proactively removing bad actors from our platform, Airbnb is supporting legislation in Albany that would provide for rigorous enforcement against illegal hotel operators, among other things — including $100 million in annual tax revenue from Airbnb alone," Kalloch said. "We hope that Comptroller Stringer will work with us to enact these common sense regulations."

White House press secretary Sarah Sanders has resorted to a stock answer: "We give the very best information that we have at the time." GETTY IMAGES

THE FOREMAN FORECAST: THE 'BEST' INFO?

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

Like the final player on the losing side of a dodgeball game, White House press secretary Sarah Sanders is doing some pretty fancy ducking and diving. Facing a daily barrage of questions from reporters — much of it keyed to President Trump's shifting versions of the facts — she has resorted to a stock answer: "We give the very best information that we have at the time."

In other words, when she says something that proves to be untrue, misleading or uninformed, she shouldn't be taken to task because she didn't know any better. Having spent more than 40 years dealing with press spokespeople representing everything from local police departments to major corporations to — yes — other presidents, I can assure you this is an entirely inadequate defense.

First, because while press secretaries are all about presenting positive views of the president, that cannot include willful deception. You can say you don't know the answer to some question. You can say you misunderstood something you were told. You can say you won't comment. You can say, "Sorry, we're out of time." But if you forward an outright lie to voters, you own it. It is now part of your professional reputation, not just the boss's.

Second, press secretaries are the public's most direct link to the inner-sanctums of the White House. That demands responsible, reliable information. The press secretary is supposed to know what is happening, when and why. Sure, some matters may be above the secretary's pay grade, but that does not excuse habitually promoting false or misleading "facts" then begging off with "I'm giving the best information I have."

And third, when you repeatedly spout off about things you don't know (or worse, things you know to be lies) people will learn not to believe you, and then even your truths will become suspect.

Sure, we all make mistakes, but when a reporter habitually gets information wrong — he or she gets gone. With her litany of spurious "facts," Sarah Sanders would not last a week in a decent newsroom. And saying she was giving it her "best" would be no defense.

DA: Park Slope driver who fatally struck two children indicted

Dorothy Bruns of Staten Island faces up to 15 years for the crash that killed a 1-year-old boy and 4-year-old girl on March 5.

nikki.mascali@metro.us

The Park Slope driver who fatally struck two young children when she ran a red light in March was indicted for reckless manslaughter and other charges on Thursday, Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez announced.

Dorothy Bruns of Staten Island was charged with second-degree manslaughter, criminally negligent homicide, reckless endangerment, third-degree assault and related charges. The 44-year-old was held on bail of $75,000 bond or $25,000 cash, and she is due back in court on June 13. She faces up to 15 years in prison if convicted.

On March 5, the 44-year-old Bruns drove her Volvo into the intersection of Ninth Street and Fifth Avenue in Park Slope, striking Abigail Blumenstein, 4, and Joshua Lew, 1, and their mothers, Lauren Lew and Ruthie Ann Blumenstein and a male pedestrian.

Both children were killed, and Blumenstein, a pregnant Tony-winning Broadway actress whose stage name is Ruthie Ann Miles, was seriously injured, though her unborn baby was unharmed, her family later said.

Bruns attempted to

"Her alleged insistence on driving despite doctor's orders and serious medical conditions that prevented her from safely doing so was not only irresponsible, it was unlawful."

flee after the crash, dragging Joshua Lew's stroller down Ninth Street until she crashed into several cars and was detained by witnesses.

Bruns told emergency responders afterward that she had suffered a seizure, which caused her to accelerate through the red light. A police source said Bruns had recently had two strokes and a neighbor said she has multiple sclerosis, which can cause seizures. Evidence cited by DA Gonzalez showed Bruns had two other seizures immediately following the crash.

Gonzalez on Thursday said Bruns was ordered not to drive for one year after she was hospitalized when she crashed into a parked car less than two months before the Park Slope incident.

"The loss of Abigail and Joshua was a horrific — and avoidable — tragedy that devastated their loved ones and hurt so many of their friends and neighbors," the DA said in a statement. "After a thorough investigation that started in the hours after the crash, my office indicted the driver for recklessly causing their deaths. Her alleged insistence on driving despite doctor's orders and serious medical conditions that prevented her from safely doing so was not only irresponsible, it was unlawful. I intend to now hold her accountable and urge all drivers to heed instructions of medical professionals and never drive a car when told not to."

Additionally, Bruns' license plate had been cited 12 times in the past two years for traffic violations that included four instances of running red lights and four for speeding in school zones.

Two more routes, the final lines in the first phase of NYC Ferry service, are expected to begin operating late this summer. NYC FERRY

NYC Ferry prepares to double fleet as ridership is predicted to soar

We're gonna need a bigger boat — and at least a few more of them.

NYC Ferry is gaining popularity quickly. Mayor Bill de Blasio announced on Thursday that ferry ridership may reach 9 million annual passengers by 2023.

That's twice the amount of passengers initially projected, according to the mayor's office, and means that the city will invest in a bigger ferry fleet to meet all that demand.

"We all know the famous phrase, 'If you build it they will come.' Well they have come and they have come and they have come in numbers much greater than we ever could imagine," de Blasio said while standing at the American Veterans Memorial Pier in Bay Ridge. "This has a lot to say about what we can do going forward to make this a better city."

The mayor added that this update "honestly surprises" officials. Previously, the city projected that ridership, once all six routes are operating, to be 4.6 million a year. Now, that projection is doubling, as officials anticipate 9 million riders annually in a few years.

Two more routes, the final lines in the first phase of NYC Ferry service, are expected to begin operating late this summer. Those lines will service Soundview and the Lower East Side.

To handle the higher expected ridership, NYC Ferry will be acquiring more vessels. The exact number needed is not yet known, but will be a mix of both 150-person and 350-person vessels.

The city is preparing to invest $300 million in capital over the next five years. NYC Ferry launched just one year ago, on May 1, 2017. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

SPECIAL

Why now is a great time to complete an MBA in the US

Find out more at the QS World MBA Tour, coming to New York City on May 5.

CRAIG O'CALLAGHAN
letters@metro.us

An MBA degree (master of business administration) is a vital tool for career development in a constantly expanding range of fields, from nonprofits to tech firms. If you're wondering whether an MBA could help you achieve your goals, here's why there's never been a better time to get your degree right here in the U.S.

Make connections

Top U.S. business schools have arguably the most established networks and connections in the world. When seeking post-graduation jobs, it's these connections that often prove vital to your success.

Many MBA programs (especially the traditional two-year programs most associated with U.S. business schools) also provide the opportunity of an internship during your MBA. These internships can lead to full-time job offers.

Business schools hold regular networking events, where you'll get the opportunity to meet with local companies and form connections — crucial for when you're negotiating the job market.

Quality schools

Rankings are a good benchmark to use when looking at different business schools. The QS Global MBA Rankings 2018 placed Harvard Business School as the top MBA program in the world. Out of the top 25 ranked MBA programs, 13 of them were found in the U.S., highlighting the strength in depth of U.S. business schools.

In addition to the Global MBA Rankings, QS also releases a report each year that identifies trends in international MBA salaries and recruitment. Data from the 2018 Jobs & Salary Trends Report found that the U.S. is currently the most generous when it comes to MBA salary levels, $98,900 being the average salary for someone with an MBA.

Home comforts

If you grew up in the U.S., you might be tempted to study abroad for your MBA and experience a new culture. However, the benefits of being familiar with your learning environment shouldn't be underestimated.

While most MBA courses abroad will still be taught in English and have a similar format to MBA programs in the U.S., the way research is conducted and papers are written in foreign countries can be different. These differences can be pretty significant when attending school in a foreign country, especially where English isn't the native language.

Thinking about the next big step in your education or career? ISTOCK

Pros and cons

Deciding the perfect location for your studies is a huge decision. Whether you choose to stay at home or venture further afield, it's crucial to ensure that the choice you make is the right one for you. Before making a decision that will undoubtedly change your life, it's always important to weigh the pros and cons and determine what will be better for you in the long run.

Hopefully though, you'll consider the perks of staying in the U.S. to get your MBA and start applying to some of the top business schools this country has to offer.

For more information, and to meet with representatives from top MBA programs from across the country, stop by the QS World MBA Tour this Saturday, May 5, from 1-5 p.m. at the New York Hilton Midtown.

LIFESTYLE

But for Mackenzie Davis that's why it is so special.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

You don't see many films like "Tully" (which opens today). Films that defiantly delve into the minutiae of everyday life and illuminate them with cinematic panache to create an effective, thought-provoking and entertaining slice-of-life picture.

The success of "Tully" isn't just down to one person, though. Director Jason Reitman, writer Diablo Cody, cinematographer Eric Steelberg, and actors Charlize Theron, the exhausted mother of three that the film revolves around, and Mackenzie Davis, the night nanny who provides her with a welcome respite, all combine to make it so effective.

I recently had the chance to speak to Davis, who quickly told me why "Tully" is proudly "gross" and "messy."

GETTY IMAGES

What attracted you to "Tully"?
Even before reading the script, the opportunity to work with Jason, Charlize and Diablo felt like it was going to be amazing. Then the script was so beautiful and honest and raw, and the part was so different to anything I'd ever played before. It felt like such a lovely space to inhabit for a month with these people that I respect so much. So there was really nothing that I didn't like about it. It felt like the first time I'd read or seen a movie that was this raw about a very normal part of life. That doesn't get a lot of attention or fanfare. I want to be a part of telling stories that haven't been told before, or been told in that way. So it was really that I felt like I was being led into a world that had been framed in a very different way up until this point

The film made me feel exhausted, and I mean that in the best possible way.
Oh my God. Even watching those scenes I was like, "This is too much for me. I can't have children." I felt really anxious watching a lot of the scenes being filmed.

"I want to be a part of telling stories that haven't been told before."

Diablo's writing is so distinct, especially in how different all of the characters are, something that feels rare in modern cinema.

That's how I felt. It wasn't as though I was like, "OK, who is this person? How am I going to make her? I have to do all of this work." Which can sometimes be really fun. But can also feel like you're doing work that should be in the script. It was so lovely to read this and go, "I know exactly who this person is. I know exactly how I want to inhabit her. I know who Marlo is and she is nothing like Tully. Craig is nothing like Marlo." Every character was just their own thing. Which just feels really, really rare. Where it's not just the writer's voice the whole time, but they give each character a voice.

What was your biggest takeaway from the film?
Having a night nanny sounds good [laughs]. More, just how important it is to tell gross, messy and honest depictions of people's lives. That makes you feel like, even if you're not going through that exact experience, it makes the film feel closer to a human experience when people are honest about what's really happening instead of presenting a beautifully filtered version of their life. I like being in movies like that, I like seeing movies like that, I like talking about movies like that. It really satisfied something I was wanting, and I was so happy to be a part of it.

'Tully' is 'gross, messy and honest'

Be part of the movement to legalize pot at Saturday's annual Cannabis Parade.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

It took nearly five decades, but the New York Cannabis Parade has finally gone mainstream.

"We have an unprecedented lineup of elected officials this year," says co-organizer Noah Potter, an attorney specializing in drug policy. "We've never had anything comparable."

The "very bold and forward-thinking" City Councilman Rafael Espinal was the first elected official to participate in the march, and that was just in 2015. In 2018, there are seven politicians taking part; New York governor hopeful Cynthia Nixon has also come out in support for legalization.

They're not the only ones showing support for the country's longest-running pro-legalization event. For the first time, the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union will also join the march, led by President Stuart Appelbaum.

Though New York has approved medical marijuana in very limited ways, the parade will stop at nothing less than full legalization. And so it will set out on May 5 at 11 a.m. from Broadway at 32nd Street all the way to Union Square Park, with plenty of wild outfits, music and, yes, toking along the way.

How it began

The story of how exactly the New York Cannabis Parade started is lost to history. "It's an old Lower East Side radical yippie [politically active hippies] event going back to the early '70s, when New York was not yet Disney World," Potter says.

There were numerous counterculture movements happening on the LES and Berkeley's Golden Gate park in the early '70s, and the fight for legalization grew out of them and spread worldwide. What started as the colloquially known Fifth Avenue Pot Parade was formalized into a global event in 1999, with parades in Rio de Janeiro, Bogota, Cape Town, Prague and even the Philippines despite President Rodrigo Duterte's own brutal drug war.

What to expect

Now that the parade's goal is in sight — 62% of New Yorkers support legalization — there's more space being made for activists on a wide range of issues, from racially biased enforcement of drug laws to civil rights and access to medicine.

But it'll never lose its party atmosphere, with plenty of live music and entertainment mixed in with the speakers. No event started by hippies could ever become totally strait-laced. There will always be giant inflatable blunts, people in marijuana-print suits and plenty of dancing.

And don't worry about being arrested. Potter describes the NYPD as "extremely helpful," even "friendly," which helped grow the event to nearly 5,000 people in 2017.

"There's a festival-carnival-parade atmosphere that is, I think, the ultimate manifestation of the political agenda," he says. "This is a celebration of life."

The Run for the Roses highlights Saturday evening from Churchill Downs.

ROBERT CRISCOLA
sports@metro.us

A Bob Baffert-trained colt once again has the target on his back going into the Kentucky Derby (Saturday, 6:30 p.m., NBC). Justify, a winner of all three starts to date, including the Santa Anita Derby, is the 3-1 morning-line favorite for this year's "Run for the Roses." He's plenty fast on paper but will have to buck a long-standing trend regarding experience, as he failed to record a start at age two. He would be the first Derby winner to not race at two since Apollo in 1882. He'll also be making his first start outside Santa Anita when he travels to Churchill Downs this Saturday. Here are three entrants that could take America's most popular horse race if Justify fails to live up to the hype.

#9 HOFBURG (20-1) is the horse with the most upside in what's probably the most competitive top-to-bottom Kentucky Derby field in years. He's raced just three times so far but does have two-year-old seasoning, albeit he was fourth after a slow start and wide trip at Saratoga. Hofburg overcame significant trouble in his maiden score back in March before placing second in the Florida Derby, which has produced three of the last five Kentucky Derby winners. He continues to work well for Hall of Fame trainer Bill Mott and lures preeminent rider Irad Ortiz Jr. His pedigree is impeccable, suggesting the demanding Derby distance (1 1/4-miles) will be no problem for him. Hofburg will probably launch from well off the pace, which is projected to be strong.

#16 MAGNUM MOON (6-1) has answered the bell in every start to date, going 4-for-4 under the care of 2017 Derby-winning trainer Todd Pletcher, but history is not on his side. Like Justify, Magnum Moon did not race at two either. However, Magnum Moon began his career in early January and has won at three different tracks in runaway style each time. That included a victory in the Arkansas Derby, which American Pharoah used as a springboard to the Kentucky Derby just three years ago. He can win from almost anywhere, but jockey Luis Saez will likely try to stalk the pace and keep Magnum Moon from dueling for the early lead. His mount should be able to negotiate 1 1/4-miles based on pedigree.

#15 INSTILLED REGARD (50-1) has had some excuses since his open-length score in January's Lecomte Stakes at the Fair Grounds, getting no pace to work within both the Risen Star and the Santa Anita Derby (he finished fourth in both). He should get the tempo he needs in the Kentucky Derby and the added ground should help him. Drayden Van Dyke, an up-and-coming California-based rider making his Derby debut, will be in the irons for Jerry Hollendorfer, who trained Battle of Midway to a third-place finish in last year's event.

Mets avoid long deGrom absence

There was every indication that the same horrendously bad luck had arrived for the New York Mets starting rotation.

It took a little over a month, but the franchise plagued by injuries to their promising starting rotation saw its first big name go down on Wednesday night after Jacob deGrom hyperextended his elbow while at-bat against the Atlanta Braves.

Despite reporting the pain to manager Mickey Callaway in the bottom of the third, deGrom went out to pitch the top of the fourth before leaving the game visibly agitated. He was replaced by Paul Sewald the following inning.

"He came in, he said 'you know what, my arm hurts on that last swing, so I'm just not going to swing the rest of the night,'" Callaway said. "He said it feels fine throwing. He hadn't had any issues throwing, so he went back out."

The team initially announced that it was a hyperextended elbow before receiving good news Thursday. An MRI revealed that there was no ligament damage to deGrom's elbow and he will attempt to make his next scheduled start on Monday.

Jacob deGrom could make his next scheduled start on Monday. GETTY IMAGES

While Noah Syndergaard, Matt Harvey, Steven Matz and Zack Wheeler all went down with injuries last year, deGrom remained the only healthy contributor as the only Mets pitcher to throw over 200 innings. He went 15-10 with a 3.53 ERA with a career-high 239 strikeouts.

He had been a flat-out ace to start this year, going 3-0 with a 1.87 ERA while striking out 54 in 43.1 innings of work. He was as close to untouchable to get as one could get at the time of his injury, recording 18.1 consecutive scoreless innings.

If deGrom can't make his next start, the disgraced Harvey could get an opportunity to get back into the rotation. The 29-year-old, who has had problems doing the right thing both on and off the field, was moved to the bullpen after Jason Vargas returned from a hand injury that delayed the start to his 2018 season. I MIGHT BE READY TO CALL LEBRON JAMES THE GREATEST

@JoePantorno

I'm a '90s kid, so there is a certain hallowed ring to the name "Michael Jordan."

Even growing up as a New York Knicks fan and watching His Airness destroy the title hopes of my hero Patrick Ewing year in and year out, to the point in which I abhorred the man, there was no denying that we were watching the greatest player in NBA history.

So when I woke up the night after Jordan hit that famed game-winning step-back jumper in Game 6 of the 1998 NBA Finals against the Utah Jazz, 6-year-old Joe made the realization that there would never be a baller greater than MJ.

Well, 6-year-old Joe is on the cusp of being wrong because I'm ready to classify LeBron James as the new G.O.A.T.

On one condition. If it wasn't already impressive enough, James has to extend his streak of consecutive trips to NBA Finals to eight. That means getting his Cleveland Cavaliers past the Toronto Raptors and either the Boston Celtics or Philadelphia 76ers as the headliner of his team once again.

It will prove once again that James can will a team to the heights of the Eastern Conference despite having little to no support around him. It's been an issue that has plagued him during most of his career with the Cavaliers.

Before I get into that, let's just look at the numbers one more time just to see how close these two really are.

Four of LeBron's last seven Finals appearances came with the Miami Heat alongside Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh, winning two of them, so you can't say that he's had no help during his career. But just take a look at this combined list of players that received substantial playing time when James carried them to a Finals appearances:

That's an awful lot of moving (and not very good) parts in just four years.

Sweep it under the rug all you want, but Jordan had Scottie Pippen, another Hall of Famer, for 11 years. That automatically trumps what LeBron has had in Cleveland.

Put two Hall of Famers together in the Eastern Conference like that today and you'll get, well, LeBron and Dwyane Wade in Miami.

Take Pippen away from Jordan and the Bulls wouldn't have made six finals and MJ certainly wouldn't have more Finals wins than "The King." The Utah Jazz, Seattle SuperSonics, Phoenix Suns and Houston Rockets would have made it a Western Conference-controlled decade.

But let's talk about what we definitely know. We've watched a man for the better part of 15 years carry a franchise and city that was on the canvas not just to relevancy, but to an elite status solely on his back.

That's good enough for me to tab him as the greatest to ever play.

Aries Focus inward and on how to best use your attributes to get things done. Refuse to let negativity take control and ruin your day. Learn from people offering sage advice.

Taurus Don't leave anything to chance or let someone else finish what you start. If you see matters through to the end, you'll have no regrets.

Gemini Put on the brakes if you've been overspending or taking on too much. Be smart when asked to take part in something that sounds too good to be true.

Cancer Mull over situations before you respond. Having a good understanding of how others feel will help you make a better choice for you and anyone your decision may affect.

Leo A change that could affect your position, reputation or status should be thought through carefully. Don't let someone else influence you if it's not in your best interest.

Virgo Make plans with friends or build your relationships with colleagues. Stepping outside the workplace will help you get to know them better.

Libra You may feel the need for change, but if you meet with opposition, you are best off backing down and finding out why you are facing resistance. Keep the peace.

Scorpio Showing interest in what others do will give you ideas for new beginnings. An open mind is the doorway to positive experiences that will encourage beneficial change.

Sagittarius Discuss your concerns, intentions and plans with someone you want to work alongside. Personal or professional, relationships will be a factor when it comes to your success.

Capricorn Don't hide how you feel. Be blunt and clear the air to distance yourself from anyone or anything you don't agree with. Don't be afraid to do your own thing.

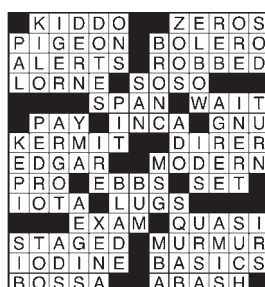

Aquarius Trust in what you know to be true, and refuse to let anyone lead you astray. Moderation will help you avoid making bad choices. Personal improvements are favored.

Pisces Look at every angle and listen to suggestions before making a decision. Taking care of your health and being honest will be in your best interest. EUGENIA LAST
